Reduction of the Public Debt.

Wednesday, we gave the figures, excluding the bonds, both in the statement of March, 1869, and in that of February, 1870, supposing that would settle the question by confirming our position. But he Union, even now, declares that our figures are erroneous, and has the effrontery to assert that the Pacific Railroad nds are included in the statement for March, but dropped in those of subsequent months !

We can have no controversy with a man claiming ordinary intelligence who, with the statement of March 1, 1869, before his eyes, can declare that the bonds are included therein. All we need to say is, that we shall be happy to meet the whole Democratic party on Concord Square to listen to the reading of that paper by the editor of the Union, or any other man who can see what is as plain as the richest, the most powerful of the cresunlight at noonday.

Dear Six:—I received yours of the liberation of a country. Often defeated, he never lost hope. With a busy persistence scarcely equalled by a Washington or a Cromwell, he came back after every repulse to reharging that the claim, on the part of the Republicans, that the public debt had been largely reduced by the present administration, was a humbug and a fraud—that the reduction was produced by excluding the Pacific Railroad bonds, which by the former administration were included as a part of the debt.
